Pushed to the Gr wing Pint

Our grandparents did it faithfully each year. Our parents might have done it when we were younger. Why not do it more today?

The "it" I am referring to is growing your own vegetables. A necessity in years gone by that is quickly becoming a necessity again. Watching the price of gasoline raise daily leads to the horrific knowledge that it matches the rising cost of food. This leads to a stomachache as I also realize that the commercial food bought at these prices are becoming suspect (point in case the salmonella found on tomatoes that sent hundreds to the hospital). It all adds up to a craving for fresh picked strawberries from my grandparent's house.

Vegetable gardens provide more than just affordable tasty nutrition. They can provide a link between the generations, an act of generosity given to Mother Nature and new culinary treats. Gardeners love to share their knowledge. Try talking about zucchini without mentioning a recipe or two and you'll see what I mean. The social pleasure associated with growing your own is self-evident.

Whether it was the price of gasoline, the tomato recall, or an interest in eating fresh that pushed you to grow your own vegetables; Furney's is here to help.
